SCAVENGER HUNT

EVERYONE in Animal Valley considered old Timothy Toad to be the most peculiar creature anywhere about. As Stevie Squirrel said, "It's all right to be thrifty, but he overdoes it." Stevie was speaking of Timothy Toad's habit of saving everything. Timothy's little house, down under the willow by the pond, was . . . well, it was a mess. Nothing had ever been thrown away. Every single thing that he'd ever earned or found, he'd kept.

Stevie Squirrel was a nice, little squirrel in most ways, but he had a peculiar habit, too! He loved to poke fun at anyone who was the least bit unusual. So of course, poor old Timothy Toad was one of his most frequent victims.

Stevie and Chester Chipmunk were walking down the road together eating apples. Chester was inviting Stevie to a party when they passed Timothy's house. "Hey, Timothy, want an apple core? Here, catch it." And he threw his apple core at him.

Chester Chipmunk nudged Stevie. "Can't you pay attention when I'm inviting you to a party?"

"Oh, yes." Stevie turned his attention back to Chester. "A scavenger hunt, you say?"

"Yep. Eight o'clock tomorrow night."

Stevie Squirrel loved to win things, and so, anxious to win the prize at the scavenger hunt, he showed up at Chester's house right on the dot of eight. "Got my list?" he asked.

"Here it is. But you'll have to wait for the others before you start hunting. Otherwise it isn't fair."

Impatiently, Stevie waited, and at last they all started out at the same time. Stevie glanced through his list of things to find. The list was numbered like this:

1. a pea-pod with two peas in it
2. a broken bike wheel
3. six orange peels
4. twenty sea shells
5. a lump of charcoal
6. an Indian wampum bead
7. half a harmonica
8. two green balloons

It was hopeless, Stevie soon decided. No matter how many homes he went to, no one had what he needed. He saw that all the other scavengers were in exactly the same fix. He was just about to give up hope when he remembered old Timothy Toad! Quick as a streak, Stevie headed for the messy, little house under the willow by the pond.

"Sir," he asked politely, after he'd knocked at the door and the toad had hobbled to answer it. "Would you happen to have anything on this list that I might borrow?"

Timothy adjusted his glasses and peered at Stevie.

"Oh ho!" he rasped. "You're the rascal who's always poking fun at me, aren't you? Give me your list—I'll see what I can do!"

Stevie felt ashamed. He was the one who liked to poke fun at Timothy.

The old toad took Stevie's list and screwed up his eyes to read it, then nodded. He went around the rooms, bending over to pick something up from under a bed, or stretching up to get something from a high shelf. In a few minutes he handed over to Stevie a pea-pod with two peas in it, a broken bike wheel, six orange peels, twenty sea shells, a lump of charcoal, an Indian wampum bead, half a harmonica, and two green balloons. The whole list!

"Oh thank you, sir," the squirrel began, still embarrassed. And there was nothing else he could say! As he was leaving he got an idea.

Stevie hurried back to Chester's house, certain he would be the first one back. And sure enough, he was. As a prize, Stevie was awarded a beautiful rug for his home.

"For Timothy's home, rather," the squirrel said, and he ran down to the toad's house with his prize. Timothy answered the knock at his door.

"Here's the prize I won with your help, here—take it!"

The old toad looked around his house. "No place to put it," he sighed. "Place is a mess. It's about time I threw a few things out. Yep, I'll do some housecleaning tomorrow to make room for this rug."

So in Animal Valley, on the night of Chester Chipmunk's scavenger hunt, an old toad and a young squirrel both lost their bad habits!
